

Sarah Sundberg

08-02-12

What is Romantic?

(age 56) My Dad's most romantic event was with my mom when they first decided they liked each other. They went on a date to the Steak Pit up at Snowbird around Christmas time. What made this so romantic was it was night while snowing and you it was really pretty because all of the Christmas lights were up. He most enjoyed talking with my mom over dinner and having a good time.

(age 19) My best friend Emily's most romantic experience was on a date with John. They picked up dinner and ate it under a tree. They played soccer which lead into them wrestling around on the grass. They fell into each other and kissed. They walked around holding hands and went to a late night movie. She thought it was romantic because they went with the flow and had a really great time, and she got kissed.

(age 23) My boyfriend Tyson's most romantic remembrance happened 2.5 years ago. We went to Murray Park, set up our blanket on top of a hill, and cuddled. We had a picnic and both of us drank out of a giant martini glass from All a Dollar. We ate starbursts and shared them with each other as we kissed. This was his favorite because it was simple, there was no rush on time, and we were both relaxed.

(age 21) My most romantic memory was on my 18th birthday when my boyfriend got us tickets to go to the Dew Tour. After we were there a couple of hours he then took me to eat dinner at Olive Garden. This was so memorable because no one had ever taken me out for my birthday before and the Dew Tour was fun, exciting, and something I had never done before. He had the whole night planned out and we were just 2 kids having a great time together.

Most of what makes something romantic is just how you are feeling towards the other person. Someone can do something extravagant but if there's no romance in the relationship then it's not going to feel romantic. In all of these romantic scenarios they all said they thought it was romantic because they were all having a good time with the other person and things were just flowing right.